New Product:

Making Better Decisions

The ZYTO Compass System prioritizes your body's preferences for specific nutritional supplements. This information helps you make better decisions about which ones to purchase and use. ZYTO's technology measures your body's responses to a specific library of nutritional products, asking your body which it prefers; this is called biocommunication. When you place your hand on the hand cradle, stimuli are sent to the body representing each individual product. The software then records your responses whether positive or negative and ranks them from highest preferred product to the lowest, and generates a report showing which products your body prefers.

Even though there are many excellent nutritional supplements to choose from, one size does not fit all and your individual needs change from time to time. So what supplements are best for you, and what supplements do you need today? The Compass puts you in touch with your body and helps you make those decisions. By making the right choices you're less likely to spend money on things you don't need and you're more likely to get the health benefits you're looking for. Healthcare professionals around the world have tested hundreds of thousands of people using ZYTO biocommunication technology to help them make better choices for their patients. With the Compass you get this same advantage, decision support for better health.
